Avoiding Cancer Caregiver Burnout

Caring for someone with cancer can be emotionally and physically draining. The physical strain paired with the heartbreak of watching someone you love suffer is a recipe for caregiver burnout.

For the sake of your health and the person you are caring for, it's important to do what you can to prevent burnout. In addition to the tips listed below, remember that feelings of loss, frustration, anger and resentment are totally normal, and do not make you a bad person or less of a caregiver.

Instead of hiding those feelings, talk about them with someone who will understand – a therapist, a fellow caregiver or someone at a support organization. Talking it out with someone will do wonders for your mental health and make you better able to devote yourself to your loved one.

90 MILLION
Americans are caregivers for loved ones who are sick or disabled in some way.

1 MILLION AMERICANS
are also caring for veterans from the IRAQ+AFGHANISTAN wars who have war-related injuries and mental illnesses.

True Dedication
A caregiver may help their loved one with washing, dressing, eating, or other daily activities, as well as taking medications, getting to doctor's appointments, and so much more.

Handle with CARE
Caregivers often assist care recipients with a variety of tasks, such as driving, shopping, and household chores. It's important to know how to handle care correctly.

- Multiple sclerosis
- Lupus
- Fibromyalgia
- COPD
- Down's syndrome
- Muscular dystrophy
- Autism
- Cancer
- ALS
- Dementia
- Parkinson's

For young and YOUNG AT HEART
Because of America's aging population, the number of people needing care has been rising, and is expected to keep going up. By 2020, people age 65 and older are expected to make up around 36% of the American population, up from 25.6% in 2000.

However, parents caring for children with disabilities are also in the family caregiver ranks. Children with conditions like autism, muscular dystrophy, and down's syndrome all require a caregiver, often through into adulthood.

CAREGIVER BURNOUT
Caregiver burnout is when a caregiver becomes emotionally and physically exhausted under the strain of caring for another person. This can manifest as:

- Irritability and feeling blue
- Fatigue and changes in sleep patterns
- Withdrawing from friends and other loved ones
- Abandoning activities you used to enjoy
- Changes in appetite and/or weight
- Depression and/or anxiety

Six tips to AVOID BURNOUTSM

- Stay HEALTHY
It's easy to spend so much time thinking about your loved one's health that you completely forget about your own. Make sure you take care of yourself: eat well, exercise, and get enough sleep.
- Pursue your INTERESTS
Sticking up on your hobbies and interests because of your caregiving duties can take a toll on your mental health and overall well-being. Make time to do things you enjoy.
- Take time to DE-STRESS
Consider taking up a stress-reducing activity like yoga, meditation, or deep breathing techniques that will help you let go of the stress of being a caregiver.
- Take A BREAK
Being a caregiver, although a labor of love, can be emotionally and physically draining. Get time to rest from being a caregiver every now and then to rest and recharge.
- Connect with other CAREGIVERS
Joining a support group or an online forum for caregivers can help you to feel less alone in your struggles and provide a sense of community.
- Seek and ACCEPT HELP
There is no shame in admitting you need help, asking for help, or accepting it when it's offered. Caregivers who ask for help are more likely to be able to cope.
